

ANTREVILLE.

Antreville is very quiet now since all of the boys and girls have gone to the different colleges. The following young ladies left last week: Miss Ethel Anderson, for Winthrop; Misses Althea Keaton and Genevieve Anderson, for Lander; Miss Erin Crowther, for Due West. The following young men leave Thursday for Erskine: Albert and Henry Erwin, Boyce Wakefield, Carl Suber, Henry Bell, Nolan Bowen and Elmore Suber. Clarence Crowther left last week for Clemson.

The Antreville school has completed its summer session, and will vacate now until the first of October. The different teachers left for their respective homes Saturday.

Rev. and Mrs. W. Smith Martin have returned home after an extended one is glad to see them back.

Misses Mary Bell and Pet Hawthorne have returned to their home in Latimer after a pleasant stay with Mrs. S. J. Wakefield.

Miss Myrtle Crowther who is teaching at Iva, spent the week-end with home folks.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Ballentine, at Washington, D. C., Sept. 18, 1918—a daughter, Virginia Caroline.

"OVER THERE," COMING HERE.

Sensational Drama to Be Shown at Opera House on October 10th.

Charles Richman and Anna Q. Nilsson give a splendid performance in the new Select production, "Over There," which is being shown at the Opera House Thursday, Oct. 10th. This picture, which was made by the Charles Richman Pictures Corporation, is being distributed through Select exchanges and is rated as one of the most gripping patriotic plays of the year.

Monte Jackson, good looking, wealthy, and with an assured social position, wins the love of Betty Adams, the lovely daughter of a retired army officer. Only one thing does he keep from her, and that is his inherent fear of fighting and the sight of blood. Coming of a long line of soldierly forebears, his seeming yellow streak, is unexplainable, and he guards his secret carefully.

The declaration of war between the United States and Germany plunges Betty's set into a furor of excitement. The girls throw themselves into Red Cross work and the men enlist in different departments of the service. Tommy Hill, who is in love with Betty's kid sister, Dolly, gives a dinner. During the evening Tommy rises to his feet and announces his intention of entering the country's service. In the excitement of the moment he calls on his guests to do likewise. Every man in the room, with the exception of Monte, responds to the appeal. Even Tommy's butler comes forward. Monte passes the matter off lightly and his delinquency is forgotten for the time.

Later, however, his course becomes a subject for discussion. Betty cuts to the heart on more than one occasion by bits of sarcasm unintended for her ears, and the matter is further aggravated when Walter Mason, one of Colonel Adam's aides, deeply in love with Betty, denounces Monte as a coward to his face. The encounter takes place in the clubhouse before a group of members, and Monte's tame acceptance of the challenge damns him utterly.

That night his engagement to Betty is formally announced at a dinner in the Adam's home. Walter Mason enters with a message for his commanding officer, which proves to be a summons to headquarters. Forced to leave earlier than he had expected the older man makes a last appeal to Monte, urging him for Betty's sake to do his bit. Driven to the wall, Monte quite definitely refuses to enlist. Betty, her faith finally shattered, returns his ring before them all and announces her engagement to Mason.

The next day Monte's partners request him to withdraw from the firm; he is cut by his friends and black-listed at his club. Only his mother is left. She alone knows Monte's secret and its cause. Shortly before his birth she had witnessed a murder and so powerfully had it shocked her that she had marked her unborn child with an unreasonable dread of violence. How Monte blindly works out his regeneration, wins back his friends and his love, furnishes a strong and compelling theme. Both Mr. Richman and Miss Nilsson rise to the demands of their roles and the picture is a gripping presentment of young America's loyalty and patriotism.

The picture is directed by James Kirkwood, for many years associated with Mary Pickford.

"CALL YOUR COUNTY AGENT."

For the information of some who may not know the duties of the county agent, we print the following clipping from an agricultural paper:

"If you can't decide what to grow See the man who ought to know,

Call the County Agent!

If the bugs begin to eat
The crops like they were meat,
Call the County Agent!

If you want to build a corn house
That is impervious to a mouse,
Call the County Agent!

If your potatoes begin to rot
When you want them for the pot,
Call the County Agent!

If you have fruit and things to can
For the farm woman, child and man,
Call the County Agent!

If your cotton won't grow right
And begins to die overnight,
Call the County Agent!

If your tractor is broken down
And the mechanic is out of town,
Call the County Agent!

If your fields are full of water
And it won't run where it "orter,"
Call the County Agent!

If your pigs are getting runted
And in spite of feed look runted,
Call the County Agent!

If you want to handle milk
And get cows as fine as silk,
Call the County Agent!

If your horses, cows and swine
Look sick and begin to pine,
Call the County Agent!

The County Agent is all right
He studies night after night,
So he will be ready when you
Call your County Agent!"
